"My Cuckoos."

A strange transformation has taken place in the reception room at the White House during the past few weeks. Some time ago, it is remembered by all visitors to the White House who are admitted to those sacred quarters, that there sat upon the mantel a large clock carved in a dark-colored wood. Perhaps it was mahogany, or it may have been some other wood. The face of the clock was delicately carved and on it were bronze characters representing the hours from 1 to 12. They were in figures, and not in Roman characters, as is usually the case on clocks. It was of a Swiss design.

Above the dial of the clock were three round doors. On the surface these little doors were smooth. One of them was yellow. It represented gold.
Another was white. It represented silver. The third was a copper color.
It represented copper. They may have been indicative of the three coin metals of the United States. But that is im-material. Behind these doors were three little birds. They were cuckoos, and as the clock struck the hours the doors flew open and the cuckoos chirped in turn the hour of the day.

It happened, just as the extra session of Congress closed, that several irreverent young southern Congressmen happened to be at the White House awaiting their turn to see the President.
One of them, a smooth-faced but bright young statesman from one of the Gulf States, happened to have in his pocket a few printed names. They were printed on linen paper. They happened to have some decidedly adhesive mucilage or cement on the back side. This irreverent young man when unobserved, save by his two colleagues, managed to affix three of the printed names, which he bore, upon these three little flap doors.
He was not observed, but late in the evening a White House messenger in dusting the mantel espied the names of Senator D. W. Voorhees, Senator R. Q.
Mills, and Senator John B. Gordon adhered to the three doors of the clock.
Above the doors and affixed to the woodwork was another printed slip bearing "My cuckoos."

The President's attention was called to this. At first he laughed. Then he laughed again. He thought it really a good joke and sent for Private Secretary Thrasher to enjoy the laugh with him.
Then he ordered that the slips be removed from the clock, but that was found to be a very difficult task. The cement used in affixing them seemed to be of a decidedly adhesive character, and the clock was badly defaced in scratching them off. The President, therefore, ordered it removed from the reception room and thrown into the garret.

Shook Dice for a Gold Mine.

Samuel I. Silverman and Dick Sherwood each owned a half interest in a valuable gold claim in Okanagan county. They decided Saturday that there wasn't room for two in its management, and hit upon a true western expedient for settling their business difficulties. But they didn't call for pistols for two, with coffee for one, or go out on the open green-sward behind the hotel, and fight with bowie knives.
There was a quicker way than that and it was safer. Sherwood and Silverman called for a dice box and the regulation number of dice.

"How shall it be?" asked Silverman, with a name-your-weapon expression on his face.

"Three shakes, horses," Sherwood replied, and as every one knew what that meant there were no other preliminaries.

Both men were as calm and collected as if an immense fortune had not been at stake. Silverman shook first. He got two pairs, fours and treys, in three series of hopes and fears. Sherwood was sure he could beat that, and he did, with three aces the first rattle of the box.

"Follow your hand," said Silverman, still unmoved. Sherwood shook and so did Silverman. The latter won.
That made it "horse and horse." Silverman rattled the bones long, but gently, with a short, circular motion suggestive of deep thought. Then two pairs rolled out, fours and treys.
He tried to "kill" and failed.
Again he attempted the same feat. Then with a glad smile he laid the box aside. The lucky bone had come a four.

Sherwood was not so confident after that, but he bore up heroically. In another shake he had a pair of aces. In another there were three aces. He puffed a breath into the box gently, and rolled out another. Then Manager S. T. Arthur, who had been a silent witness, supported a man on each arm and a trip was made to the refreshment room.

The claim will be called the Monte Carlo by its owner, Mr. Sherwood. It was bonded some time ago by a payment of $1,000, but the bond lapsed.
Mining men regard it as a good prospect, as the country within a circle of a few miles contains thousands of ounces of the precious yellow metal.—Spokane
